Scope of the Congress:

The conference objective is to showcase research and development activities in bees and bee products.

Asia has long been well known for its glorious tradition of beekeeping and honey hunting, rich and diversified bee flora and fauna and suitable climate for beekeeping almost throughout the year. Asia is one of the leading continents in beekeeping research and training. Beekeeping is now established and developed as a profitable agro- forest based industry providing basic employment, supplementary income and nutritious food to a large rural population besides enhancing crop productivity through pollination.

Judicious planning and meticulous implementation of different innovative programs of Government departments, research institutions, private organizations, Universities and NGOs have paved the way for the modernization of beekeeping. In view of the availability of vast honey potentials, there is tremendous scope for further expansion, extension and diversification of beekeeping for sustainable livelihoods.

Beekeeping plays a crucial role in the present context of commercialization of agriculture and liberalization of economy. It covers entire scope of honeybee resources, bee products, beekeeping practices, pollination services and their interface with business systems and environment integrity. There is a significant unknown diversity of scientific and practical knowledge available in different countries which need to be disseminated properly. Due to lack of coordination amongst different implementing agencies little information is available on the overall status of research, training and extension systems.

The International Beekeeping Conference will provide a forum for reorienting the policies and programs for more productive and sustainable apiculture. The theme of the congress “Beekeeping development and its relevance in mountain agriculture” is most apt in the present context.

The three day conference organized by Century Foundation, Bangalore, India in association with Ministry of Agriculture, Royal Government of Bhutan will help to develop an agenda to ensure sustainable livelihood, natural resource use optimization and eco-system protection through income generating activities like beekeeping. It will bring together the international scientific community involved in the study of bees and a unique opportunity to deepen our understanding of the diversity of bees in the Himalayan Kingdom bees and experience the wonderful hospitality of Bhutan.
